The Guilford Press, a leading publisher of mental health, education, geography, and research methods titles, is now a Global Certified Accessible™ e-book publisher. Certified titles bring equal access to information for learners with reading barriers.

Accessible e-books are designed with special elements to guarantee that all readers, of all abilities, have access to the same information. Guilford's accessible e-books have better navigation in them, and include text that describes figures and other non-textual elements (called "alt text"). The accessibility software also has features for people with low vision (for example, font sizing) and dyslexia (such as special fonts and colored backgrounds). Many people with ADHD benefit from accessible e-books because hearing the text while reading along helps with focus.

Benetech, a nonprofit that creates software for social good in education and other areas, developed the Global Certified Accessible™ program. Guilford is the second publisher to receive Global Certified status. Guilford is a longtime partner of Benetech's Bookshare initiative, the world's largest library of accessible e-books for people with reading barriers.

"This is something that everyone at Guilford is very proud of," says David Mitchell, Guilford's Director of Business Management. "We knew that that one day all e-books would be made accessible, but we didn't realize how ahead of the curve we were. It's wonderful to be recognized as Global Certified Accessible. We did it because it is the right thing to do. Knowledge shouldn't have barriers."

"An accessible e-book is a better e-book for anyone who reads it," said Brad Turner, Benetech VP and GM of Global Education and Literacy. "Guilford's Global Certified Accessible textbooks are not only creating opportunities for students with disabilities to pursue the career of their dreams, in psychology, education, research, social work, and more, but opening more modes of learning for all students to choose what works best for them."

For Guilford, the demand for accessible e-books has been highest for textbooks, so the company is beginning with this category in the fall of 2020. Initial accessible e-books include bestselling resources such as Motivational Interviewing, Third Edition by William R. Miller and Stephen Rollnick; Action Research in Education, Second Edition by Sara Efrat Efron and Ruth Ravid; and Cognitive-Behavioral Therapy, Third Edition: Basics and Beyond by Judith S. Beck. The eventual goal is for all e-books to be "born accessible"—that is, accessible right from initial publication.
